

PATIENT INFORMATION

YOUR WOUND AFTER A SKIN BIOPSY

Introduction

You have had a small sample of skin taken today, this is known as a skin biopsy.

This sample will now be sent for laboratory analysis in order to assist the Consultant with diagnosis and further treatment if necessary.

Your wound

Following your skin biopsy there may be some discomfort after the local anaesthetic wears off- Paracetamol may be taken at the recommended doses.

Aspirin should be avoided as it encourages bleeding. However, if you have been prescribed low dose aspirin for other reasons continue to take it.

Keep the dressing in place for 24-48 hours. After that, the wound may be left open to the air or a new dressing applied if preferred.

After removal of the dressing you may shower but avoid bathing. If the wound gets wet, gently pat it dry.

If the occurs (if arm or leg – raise the affected area; if face – sit up). Use a clean tissue or handkerchief folded up tightly, place over the wound and press with your fingers. Apply direct pressure for 5-10 minutes. If this is not successful seek advice from your local Minor Injury Unit.

If the wound becomes red, hot, swollen, painful or discharges several days after the biopsy, there may be an infection present. Please contact your own GP.

Avoid putting strain on the biopsy site whilst the stitches are in place and for 7-10 days afterwards.

Your GP's practice nurse will take out your stitches, unless otherwise indicated.

Please contact the surgery beforehand to make an appointment.
